Situation overview

- Widespread missile strikes continue to target energy infrastructure, causing widespread blackouts and disruption of heating and water supplies. As of 28 November, the Ukrainian energy system is only able to cover 70% of peak demand (source: UNOCHA).
- Numerous major population centres remain without reliable access to water and heating as winter sets in. Winterisation efforts continue to be a priority for the entire humanitarian community,
- with organisations working to ensure that operations continue as power shortages impact civilians and the humanitarian response. There have been rapid increases in requests for fuel and generators from communities and local government to ensure energy supplies for critical facilities such as hospitals, schools and heating points.
- Humanitarian access has been limited in oblasts in the South and East of Ukraine due to the areas not currently under the government control, and security risks arising from active ground conflict and shelling. (source: ACAPS)
- There is a shortage of places for Ukrainian children in preschools in Batumi, the second most heavily populated city by Ukrainian refugees in Georgia. The lack of childcare centres create an additional obstacle for parents in their efforts to find a job.

Note: Ninety percent of our work in Ukraine Crisis Response is through our new partners. Thus, lag in gathering report data was experienced at initial stage.
