CONCLUSION

Brief Overview

Angola, a country with a population of over 30 million people, faces significant socio-economic and environmental challenges, particularly in the southern regions where severe drought has heavily impacted communities. The lack of rainfall and the scarcity of resources have worsened food insecurity, making the situation even more critical for thousands of families, especially in rural and hard-to-reach areas.

Moreover, the fragility of health systems, particularly in rural areas, and the high maternal and child mortality rates have hindered access to essential care for the most vulnerable populations. These combined factors have increased inequalities and poverty, affecting the well-being of many children and families.

This report aims to highlight three crucial initiatives by World Vision Angola to contribute to addressing these food and health emergencies in the country. The actions focus especially on mitigating the impacts of drought and improving maternal and child health, aiming to alleviate food insecurity, combat malnutrition, and reduce maternal and child mortality in these highly affected communities, which have been prioritized for the implementation of these interventions.

World Vision Angola National Director
Dawn Goodwin

Foreword

At World Vision Angola, we remain deeply committed to serving the most vulnerable children and communities. As a grant-funded office, Gift-in-Kind (GIK) contributions have been instrumental in complementing our interventions, enabling us to reach more families with essential support. Over the past year, these contributions have helped improve food security, provide critical nutrition support, and enhance maternal and child health. Through strategic partnerships, we have been able to extend our impact, ensuring that vital resources reach those who need them most.

GIK continues to be a key driver in strengthening our humanitarian and development efforts, allowing us to respond effectively to pressing needs while building long-term resilience. We are grateful to all our partners and stakeholders who make this work possible, and we remain committed to leveraging every opportunity to improve the well-being of children and communities across Angola.

Introduction

As a child-focused organization dedicated to improving the well-being of the most vulnerable children, World Vision has been working in Angola since 1989. Our development programs are focused on:

- Improving the health and nutrition of children and their families
- Improving access to water and sanitation facilities
- Strengthening civil society, child protection, and social protection systems
- Improving educational opportunities
- Increasing family resilience, focusing on economic development and land ownership

Our programs benefit approximately 1 million people annually, and for this strategic implementation cycle, we aim to reach about 2.5 million children in the country.
