Bangladesh is one of the countries in the world that has the largest number of children (46%) out of its total population. Also, Bangladesh is among the first few countries that ratified the United Nations Convention on the Rights of the Child within three months of its adaptation by the UN General Assembly in November 1989. It came into force on 2nd September 1990. The Government of Bangladesh has taken various initiatives and made number of progresses to ensure child rights and protection across the country. Despite of all the efforts still approximately 82% of 57.2 million children become victims of violent discipline before they turn 14 years old, more than 77% children faces corporal punishment, bullying, and other physical violence in educational setting and 30% of caregivers feel that physical punishment is required for children.

In 2017, World Vision Bangladesh (WVB) externally launched its 2nd global campaign ‘It takes me to end physical violence against children at home, school and workplace’ which was earlier internally launched in 2016 and now it is implementing in 51 Area Programs across the country.

The Government of Bangladesh is endeavoring to achieve Sustainable Development Goals and WVB through this campaign contributes to achieve the target 16.2: End abuse, exploitation, trafficking and all forms of violence against and torture of children.

Through multi sectorial collaboration WVB is giving importance on two broader objectives which is addressing social norms and traditional behaviors towards ending physical violence against children and strengthening child protection system at local level.

In the last one year, WVB made the following progresses on ending child violence:

- Around 700,000 community people were sensitized on ending physical violence against children.
- Total 58 union parisads allocated BDT1,262,923,588.83 (USD 1.5 million) and developing action plan against the budget to reduce physical violence against children.
- Partnership with National Human Rights Commission to implement the campaign in Bangladesh
- Last three years’ government budget was analyzed to look at the allocation for children. The recommendation about providing an economic code for identifying the budget for children was submitted by National Human Rights Commission to the finance minister
- Ministry of Women & Child Affairs formed a committee to support World Vision for implementing the campaign across the country

- 31,413 faith leaders became active actors to mobilize the community people about ending physical violence against children.
- 407 schools declared physical violence free school
- 100 heroes were selected to work as change agent for ending violence against children
- 2500 child forums were integrated in the campaign to address the issue at local level.
- A total 33 celebrities endorsed the campaign and created mass awareness among people.

This campaign is targeting 5 million children to be free from physical violence and will continue till 2021. Ending violence against children should be everyone’s motto. And as an employee of World Vision we are committed to achieve WVB’s vision and mission and together by creating a safe, care and supportive environment for children.

He also says, “The Quran tells us not to teach others what we ourselves do not practice. But here we have identified many gaps for which our families face pain and unhappiness.”

He informed that plan has been made and their plan is to practice those by themselves first and then teach children to bring transformation in family and society. The change maker, Imam expressed his commitment while attaining the ‘Celebrating Family Training of Facilitator workshop’ held on in 4-8 February 2018 at Paba, Rajshahi.

How thoughts changed

Md. Maksudullah shared that he did not know enough about World Vision previously and what he knew only about the organization is a christian charity organization. “But after participating at few programs my perception has been changed totally. Now I see that World Vision is providing very good services to the poor community and children.”

He now advocates for change

Md. Maksudullah did not stop attending the workshop. He has become advocate for change in the community by being involved with World Vision though Faith-led Child Development Project. Recently, he has organized a Celebrating Family Workshop with other Muslim faith leaders and Imams as well as facilitated the event and shared his learning. Now he is ready to utilize his time and talents in facilitating learning events. He is even committed to develop preaching guide for Muslim faith leaders on various social issues.

His commitment

He boldly said that he is ready to implement events and programmes jointly with World Vision as well as mobilize his community people, parents and Muslim faith leaders so that all can also contribute to the wellbeing of children.
“Mother does not hit me anymore”

“He used to make lot of troubles with other children, even with elders in the village. I was so embarrassed and frustrated” says Gita, mother of Topu, 8, who lives under Assasuni working area. Gita tried to teach her son how to behave well with others but in wrong way. She used to hit her son with sticks, and punished him different ways.

Their neighbors say that every evening there was chaos at Topu’s house and the boy used to cry loudly disturbing the serenity of the village. Sometimes neighbors had to step in to rescue him from mother’s anger.

Taposi Rani, a member of Village Development Committee, lives only few houses away from Topu’s house, knew the incident. She always felt very sad and disturbed for the little boy but had no idea of what to do.

On last March she got an opportunity to participate a session of “It takes me” campaign that brought a drastic change in Topu’s life. Taposi came to know about physical violence, corporal punishment and many more relevant issues from the campaign organized by World Vision. With the inspiration to do something Taposi started to talk with Topu’s family, with his parents and Topu. She tried to understand the problem first and tried to explain to the parents about the bad effect of physical punishment. She advised them to make Topu discipline in different ways. Gradually the parents started to realize the fact and decided to change their behavior towards their son.

Gita says smilingly, “It has been more than a month I no longer hear the noise from Gita’s house at the evening”.

“We do huge works at Upazila level but all cannot keep significant impact in community. I believe “It takes me” campaign is enough focused and specific initiative which will be successful to reach its goal,” says Upozila Education Officer of Fulbari, Mst. Hasina Bhuiya after issuing an order copy to ensure physical violence is totally stopped at her area.

“After knowing about this campaign, I was so impressed and became interested on it considering that World Vision is advocating my words. As we are trying to make a peaceful environment and child friendly space at all schools, this campaign can also be a useful tool to ensure our aspiration” she continued.

“Later on we the team of Upazila Primary Education Department and Fulbari Area Program arranged several meetings on how to sensitize mass community on the negative impact of physical violence against children. Upon our brain storming, we issued an order copy to all the head teachers of 110 govt. primary schools and 42 cadet and non-government schools to ensure physical violence is totally stopped.”- she enthusiastically shared.

“We have nothing to lose here. We have just started hoping to be the pioneer and role model across the country by stopping physical violence against children at school and home. She concludes saying, “We want no child left behind”
